Some students spooked by clowns near campus

Sabrina Santoro | Assistant News Editor

The nationwide phenomenon of creepy and grotesque clowns may have some Americans panicking, but Chapman students who have seen clowns in the city of Orange are not nearly as spooked.

When sophomore screenwriting major Leah Roach saw a clown about two weeks ago on Chapman Avenue near Panther Village in broad daylight, she said was not worried for her safety nor did she call Public Safety or the Orange Police Department.

“He was just dressed up like something you’d see at a kid’s birthday party, taking a walk down the sidewalk,” Roach said. “I didn’t call the police or anything because he just seemed like he was going for a walk and I was pretty hype to see him.”

According to Sgt. Fred Lopez, the Orange Police Department public information officer, only one local clown sighting was reported to the department about two weeks ago at La Veta Elementary.

“That’s the only one that I’m aware of but we never located, saw, or found any adult witness that could corroborate that there was ever a clown anywhere near the area,” Lopez said. “We did take an informational report but we consider that to be unfounded.”

Emma Hughes, a freshman chemistry major, had a story similar to Roach’s after she said she spotted a clown near Lastinger Science Center on campus Oct. 18.

“I was walking and there was a guy dressed up as a clown talking to someone. I didn’t feel threatened,” Hughes said. “I am scared to see a clown that is actually trying to scare people and honestly this is isn’t your average clown sighting because it wasn’t scary, he was just talking to another person.”

Roach said that she thinks the paranoia surrounding clown sightings has gotten out of control.

“I think the whole thing is pretty crazy, especially when the clowns get physical and attack people, but if they’re just roaming around, giving people a scare, I think they’re exactly what we need. I love the clowns,”

Roach said.

Heather Mikles, a sophomore television writing and production major, said that she was scared of clowns when she was younger and her fear has come back after reports of clown sightings across the country.

“I eventually got over it, but now with all these clown sightings, all that suppressed fear is coming back,” Mikles said. “If I saw a clown I’d probably call my mom and tell her I love her since I accept the fact that I’m probably gonna die. I’m sure tons of people are going to dress up as clowns on Halloween. so I guess we’ll just have to prepare ourselves.”

Since the La Veta Elementary clown sighting was an isolated incident for the police department, Lopez does not think that Orange residents have anything to worry about, despite Halloween being around the corner.

“I think there was some imagination that ran wild because from the distance they said that they saw the kids they were making comments about the makeup on their face and the freckles. I don’t think you can see freckles from a half mile away and that was the distance that they were talking about so I don’t think that ever happened but I can’t say for sure. I wasn’t there and I certainly would not call a little kid a liar,” Lopez said. “We take an abundance of caution because it is involving children and we did take a police report. I think these things tend to take on some lengths of their own.”

Final presidential debate leaves some students undecided

Alexis Allen | Staff Writer

As the presidential elections near, many students are still undecided about who will have their vote Nov. 8. However, some of the 150 students who gathered to watch the final presidential debate in the Student Union on Oct. 19 say they have not allowed recent scandals to influence their decision to vote for Republican nominee Donald Trump.

NBC leaked a video to the Washington Post showing footage and recording of Trump having a lewd and explicit conversation with former NBC anchor Billy Bush — which involved Trump telling Bush that he “just starts kissing (beautiful women),” and advocating “(grabbing) them by the (expletive).”

Some students said that the scandals have demonstrated Trump’s inability to govern — but this has not necessarily changed their votes.

“It hasn’t swayed my decision between (Trump) and (Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton),” said Chapman Republican club president Cameron Gelinias about the tape. “But it has definitely made me kind of just think about (Trump) as a candidate and how foolish all the people who supported him in the primaries were, for electing somebody to the general election that’s not electable.”

About 150 students congregated in the Student Union Oct. 19 to watch the final presidential debate. Some were still undecided about which candidate to vote for.

However, Gelinias thinks that stopping Clinton is the most important goal in the upcoming elections — even if it means that his vote is cast for Trump.

“I despise Hillary Clinton. I think that she is everything that’s wrong with the government and everything that’s wrong with corruption and the way that this government’s been run, by both parties, for a long time,” Gelinias said. “I think that it’s in the best interest of the country to try to get behind (Trump) as best as you can without making yourself look like an idiot,” said Gelinias.

Gelinias said he is still voting for Trump despite some of his past actions.

“Some of the things he’s said and done aren’t completely defensible,” Gelinias said. “But I do think that as a whole, he does represent my beliefs better than Hillary Clinton does.”

Like Gelinias, some other students are voting in an effort to keep who they feel is the more divisive of the nominees out of the White House. Some are coming to odds with the disconnect between candidates who support their views and candidates who are more likely to garner more votes.

“I’m kind of struggling with it because as far as who represents my views, that’s (Green Party nominee) Jill Stein,” said Mara Hughes, a freshman creative producing major. “So I am thinking I’ll be voting for Hillary, because no matter what, we need to defeat Donald Trump.”

But even students with their party’s candidates on the debate stage don’t feel like their political views are being represented.

Americans are left forced to choose between the two most disliked candidates to spearhead a general election in history, according to a FiveThirtyEight poll that studied current candidates’ approval ratings.

“I have no idea (who I’m voting for),” said Kunal Sharma, a sophomore political science and business administration double major.

Sharma identifies as Republican but is uncommitted to a candidate.

Aasif Mandvi talks 'Daily Show' and immigrating to America

Jamie Altman | Managing Editor

The most affectionate moment Aasif Mandvi ever saw between his parents was after a practical joke involving urine.

The joke stemmed from an Indian prime minister who was known for purposefully drinking his own urine, Mandvi told an audience of Chapman students Tuesday night in Memorial Hall, reading from his book, "No Land's Man."

"Urine drinking was one of those things that, as an Indian kid, you hope your friends never find out about your culture," the actor and comedian said. "Bathing in the Ganges and cows on the highway already are enough to explain to your Western friends."

In a story that has been told and re-told in Mandvi's family, his parents convinced his sister that they were drinking his father's urine, and that it was completely acceptable. After revealing the joke that the pale yellow liquid was actually soda, Mandvi said he had never seen his parents so romantic with each other — acts that he said are unusual among married couples in the Indian culture.

"Both of them were more proud of this practical joke than they were of anything they had ever done together, including raising two children and emigrating," Mandvi told a laughing crowd of students.

The University Program Board fall speaker Mandvi, who was born in Bombay, India, is best known as a correspondent for "The Daily Show," ending his nine-year stint around the time Trevor Noah replaced Jon Stewart as the show's host in 2015.

The event drew a lower turnout than previous speakers, with about 100 students in attendance, according to sophomore Sneh Chawla, the awareness director for UPB. Nicole Byer from "Girl Code," who spoke at Chapman Sept. 9, brought a crowd of 550, and more than 360 came to Memorial Hall to see Kunal Nayyar from "The Big Bang Theory" last fall.

"They (UPB members) told me there were going to be like hundreds of people here, and then they came backstage and they were like 'People have class at night here, there are only like 25 people,'" Mandvi said at the beginning of his talk, which started at 7 p.m.

Chawla said that the timing of the event was one of the factors contributing to the attendance.

"We also did things a little differently this year," Chawla said. "Because of the presidential debate, we chose not to host the event (Wednesday) to provide an opportunity for students to attend (the presidential debate) as well. Since we are in the middle of election season, we feel that it is important that students have an opportunity to attend such a crucial debate. Furthermore in previous years, we have hosted our program on Wednesday night as opposed to Tuesdays when many students have night classes."

UPB budgeted $16,000 for the free event — which Chawla said included the speaker, books and other items — compared to the budget for Leslie Odom Jr.'s Sept. 25 talk at Chapman, which was $15,000.

Justin Sanchez, a sophomore psychology major, agreed that class times could be a reason for the event's low turnout.

"I don't think it's a big deal," Sanchez said. "A lot of people have class around this time. Two of my friends had labs for three hours around this time and are still in them so I don't think it means that much."

Despite the number of people in the audience, students appreciated the experiences Mandvi shared.

"My friend told me to come because it was supposed to be a thought-provoking kind of thing, and I like that," said sophomore accounting major Lauren Higo. "I liked his stories from his book. I thought those were pretty interesting to hear, like about his culture and his life."

Zoe Baron contributed to this report.

Q&A with Aasif Mandvi

Jamie Altman | Managing Editor

Q: What advice do you have for college students?

A: Stay in school. I don't know what it's like anymore. When I was in school, it was all about 'Stay in school.' Maybe for you guys, it's about 'Screw school, go discover an app.' Disrupt something and be a social entrepreneur. It may be a different world. I've been out of school for so long that I don't know. But whatever you want to do, it is important to have that foundation, hopefully school or an education. And then you can go off and say, 'I don't wanna be a lawyer, I want to invent an app or live in the Silicon Valley.'

Q: What is your favorite segment that you did on "The Daily Show?"

A: My personal favorite was the first time I ever appeared on "The Daily Show." I did this piece and it was my first appearance on "The Daily Show," and that has a special place for me. It was also an incredibly profound piece.

It was the one that got me hired on the show. I didn't write it, but it was written for me. It still is one of the most provocative pieces I've ever done on "The Daily Show," and that was Aug. 9, 2006.

Q: What was the craziest thing you ever did for "The Daily Show?"

I think when we did the thing in Idaho about Simplot and the holes and conspiracy, that was a really fun piece to do. Some of those pieces were hard because initially when we were "The Daily Show," we didn't have a lot of frills. We were changing in gas station bathrooms and stuff. There was one where I literally changed into a Batman costume in a gas station bathroom. I literally went in and it was a gas station and I came out in a Batman costume and just walked out, and people were like 'What the (expletive) just happened?'

Q: What is the weirdest thing a fan has ever done?

A: Sometimes people will point at you

REBECCA GLASER News Editor

Aasif Mandvi sat down for a Q&A with The Panther.

and say your name which is kind of weird because they don't have anything to say, they're just like 'AASIF!' And then you're like 'Yeah!' And they're like 'Right?' They don't say 'Love your work,' or anything. It's just 'I know who you are!' That's it. 'I recognize you!' There was a woman who I met in a bar. She came up to me and she was pregnant and she told me that I could sleep with her and it would be OK with her husband. I was on her list, like a cheat sheet. But she was like, pregnant. And I was like, 'This is weird, uh, thanks!' Not that it would have made a difference if she wasn't pregnant, but the fact that she was pregnant made it all the more absurd. That would have been weird. She would have said to her child, 'You know, one time I slept with this guy while you were in my stomach.'

Chapman and the Supreme Court

Gary Johnson taps Chapman law school professor as potential Supreme Court judge pick

Atharshna Singarajah | Senior Writer

Tom Campbell, a Fowler School of Law professor, was named as one of Libertarian presidential nominee Gary Johnson's top picks for Supreme Court judge, Johnson declared during a C-SPAN interview Oct. 11.

Despite the prestige of the potential nomination, Campbell said he has never met Johnson, and does not know why he was chosen.

"I was surprised and honored," Campbell said. "It's a very high honor to be considered and I heard about it when the press secretary of the law school sent me an email."

As for the reality of heading to Washington D.C., Campbell is not optimistic.

"There is no way," he said.

The other potential nominee tapped by Johnson during the C-SPAN interview was Jonathan Turley, a law professor from George Washington University.

Campbell, who stepped down as dean of Chapman's law school after five years in February, thinks this consideration is a result of a class that he teaches about the separation of powers, which comes from a book he wrote in 2004.

"I have a suspicion it has to do with the separation of powers," he said. "I have a separation of powers class (over interterm) that taught the subject in law school. I brought a lawsuit against (then-President Bill) Clinton in 1999 for going to war with Yugoslavia. I'm also probably one of the only law professors who has sued the president. It must have been something with that."

Campbell, who as of last August switched his party affiliation from Republican to no-party preference, graduated from Harvard Law School in '76 and has since served in the House of Representatives and on the California State Senate.

He came to Chapman in 2009 during a two-year leave of absence from the University of California, Berkeley, where he was dean of the business school. Campbell hoped to become better known in Orange County because it was a more Republican region, he told The Panther in September 2015. He began working full time at Chapman in 2011 after he lost his third U.S. Senate race.

After stepping down as dean in February, he returned as a faculty member of the Fowler School of Law.

Campbell was among 30 Republican former members of Congress who announced in an open letter released Oct. 6 that they would not vote for Republican nominee Donald Trump in the Nov. 8 election.

"In nominating Donald Trump, the Republican Party has asked the people of the United States to entrust their future to a man who insults women, mocks the handicapped, urges that dissent be met with violence, seeks to impose religious tests for entry into the U.S. and applies a de facto ethnicity test to judges," they wrote. "This is no longer about our party; it's now about America. We may differ on how we will cast our ballots in November, but none of us will vote for Donald Trump."

In May, Campbell wrote a column for The Orange County Register directed to libertarian Republicans, advising that their views might align more with Johnson's than Trump's.

"Libertarian Republicans also have alternatives," Campbell wrote. "Indeed, as their name implies, they can vote libertarian. If the ticket is again Johnson and Gray, they might match the sentiments of libertarian Republicans more than a Trump-led ticket, and certainly more than a Hillary Clinton-led ticket."

Some students have shown their appreciation for Campbell's accomplishment.

"Though I did not get to interact with Professor Campbell very much, it was apparent to me that he has the friendly, compassionate and respectful demeanor that we have been missing in recent politics," said second year law student Grace Nguyen.

Campbell's resume highlights

- White House Fellow, 1980-1981
- Director of the Bureau of Competition in the Federal Trade Commission, 1981-1983
- Law school professor at Stanford University, 1987-2002

- U.S. congressman, 1989-1993, 1995-2001
- Member of the Council of Economic Advisors to the Governor (chaired by Milton Friedman), 2003-2005
- Director of the California Department of Finance, 2004-2005

Proposed plan to limit public access to campus

Xavier Leong | Senior Writer

Walking around campus, neighbors walk their dogs on campus, Orange High School students wait in line at Starbucks and community members attend major events.

Chapman is an open campus, but some students have a problem with that.

"Many students have come up to me on the issue of limited studying spaces," said Michelle Zhou, the Schmid College of Science and Technology student government senator.

Zhou is advocating for the campus to restrict the Leatherby Libraries during the week prior to finals week to Chapman students and staff.

An open campus means some facilities are open to the public. All food venues on campus accept cash and credit cards as well as Panther Bucks, allowing anyone to purchase food, and the Leatherby Libraries has no restrictions on who is allowed inside to use its resources.

She believes that by limiting access to strictly Chapman personnel during these weeks, students will have access to study space currently used by non-Chapman students.

Zhou sent out a poll to see if students support limiting public access of the libraries during finals week.

"I think the proposal would be a great idea. We do pay for the services of the library and when non-Chapman students take up our study spaces during finals week, that can be extremely frustrating," said Danielle James, a senior strategic and corporate communication major.

IS&T tests student response to phishing emails

Sabrina Santoro | Assistant News Editor

In an effort to raise student awareness of fraudulent phishing emails, Chapman's Information Systems and Technology (IS&T) department sent a simulated phishing test to students Oct. 12, said Information Security Officer George Viegas.

Phishing is the act of posing as a legitimate company in order to commit fraud against an account holder. The email was seemingly sent from IS&T — but used a different address than the one listed online — and told students to click on a link to change their passwords due to a security breach.

As of Oct. 18, software tracking revealed that 26 percent of students have clicked the fake phishing link in the email, Viegas said.

"That email was actually sent by my department," Viegas said. "It was the first one that we have sent out to give a new anti-phishing training system. That email was sent out in an effort to educate our students. We did have some number of our students who clicked on that link and it took them to a training base that says 'This is a Chapman University phishing test and we want you to beware of phishing, and here are the things to watch out for.'"

The department hopes that sending out this email will help determine how many students are vulnerable to these types of emails by cataloguing how many recipients access the link.

"We hope it will increase the awareness within our student body of how to recognize a phish. It will help them to distinguish what is a real email. And then we hope that by doing that over time, there will be less and less people clicking on a phish," Viegas said.

The students who clicked on the link in the simulated phishing email were sent to a webpage that IS&T created explaining the rules to staying safe online, including deleting unwanted emails and forwarding suspicious emails to abuse@chapman.edu.

Some students felt that the fake phishing emails could potentially be counterproductive, perhaps leading students to dismiss emails that are truly malicious and assume that they were sent by the university.

"I think that's interesting, but may give students the wrong idea. They may start clicking on more phishing emails thinking they are going to get to a secure link set up by the school and I do not think that is fair," said Courtney Marshall, a sophomore news and documentary and theatre major. "But it also may teach students without them getting a virus like you typically would with a phishing email. Honestly, I don't know whether I like it or not — but that's very interesting."

Viegas said that the phishes set up at Chapman in the past have included gathering students' passwords and attempting to use them on a variety of different websites — including bank websites.

"If you use (a) username or password, chances are you'll use the same password elsewhere," Viegas said.

"They either try to use ransomware or they try to get your ID and password so they can steal your identity."

According to Viegas, the two main intentions behind phishing emails are to leave ransomware — which is a software that blocks access to a computer until the user pays a sum of money — on one's computer to get money or to steal a user's identity by acquiring their username and password through a web link.

In the last three months, the most impactful phishing emails designed to collect personal logins and passwords sent to the Chapman community that were reported to IS&T have been posted on a phish status webpage. Viegas said that the department only releases the most impactful or dangerous phishing emails for students to see.

"We actually do get many more. We don't want to put too much information out there, but just the ones that are most impactful, the ones that we get the most reports about. The more amount of people that forward it, the more people are seeing it," Viegas said. "Sometimes these guys won't target all students. They'll get a mail list from somebody and they may target 50 students or they may target a thousand students, so depending on how many people are reporting it, we get a feel for how impactful it is and we post it up there."

According to the IS&T website, universities nationwide have noticed an increase in successful email-based phishing attacks.

"They come in bursts. There will be some weeks where you'll suddenly get a burst of activity and there will be some weeks when they come slow, and then they come back again. It's the same set of bad actors who are targeting all the .edu emails, and they go attack us and then go to a bunch of the other places, and then go back to Chapman," Viegas said. "Sometimes they will send it to a large number of people, sometimes they will send it to a small number. The biggest I've seen is about 1,500 students getting an email at one time."

Student government holds special election after 3 resignations

Sabrina Santoro | Assistant News Editor

Student government will be hosting a special election Nov. 7-9 to fill eight vacant senate positions, after three senators resigned and four seats were left empty during the Sept. 22 elections because no students ran for them. School of Pharmacy senator Melody Ra left her position Sept. 26, meaning that an additional seat will be up for re-election.

Student government President Annabell Liao said that this semester, there have been three senator resignations not including Ra, who Liao said declined her senate seat four days after the election before she was sworn in, because she could no longer commit to fulfilling the duties of a student government senator.

“To prevent further resignations, student government’s executive branch has gone over the governing documents with the current senate to make sure they fully understand what is expected of them so they can make informed decisions about whether they can fulfill the responsibilities or not,” Liao said. “We will also review the expectations with all candidates in a mandatory candidate meeting before they start campaigning.”

Last spring, four senators resigned, the fourth leaving senate with two weeks remaining in her term. Since the spring semester, Tosh Turner resigned from his College of Performing Arts seat, Vi Luong resigned as Argyros School of Business and Economics senator and Emma Cronshaw resigned from senior class senator.

A College of Performing Arts senator and a student organization senators have plans to resign at the end of the semester because they are studying abroad, and another student organization senator is leaving the position to graduate a semester early, Liao said.

Sophomore Speaker of Senate Mitchell Rosenberg agreed that student government should review expectations and responsibilities with candidates before new senators are elected.

“I think it’s important to educate (the newly elected senators) on what the responsibilities are which we do. Maybe some of them sometimes miss a meeting or miss something and they’re not fully aware of what all the responsibilities entail and that sometimes gets in the way,” Rosenberg said. “So I think just in the future, I think it’s on us to be clear exactly what this is. It’s a job. I think that will hopefully curb any further resignations.”

Liao said that two student organization seats, two School of Communication seats, one College of Performing Arts seat, one at-large seat, one Argyros School of Business and Economics seat and one senior class seat will be open in the upcoming election.

According to Director of Elections Christopher Nelson, one School of Pharmacy seat that has remained vacant for two elections will be open as an at-large senate seat. This will be the second election where two School of Communication seats and one senior class senate seat are being offered.

“In the case a seat does not get filled this election, it will remain vacant and be available for the next election. However, per our election code, any seat that remains vacant through two elections will then be hosted as an at-large seat,” Nelson said.

The filing period to run in the upcoming election closes on Oct. 28 at noon and the actual campaign process will begin on Oct. 31. Voting will open online on Nov. 7 and end at 5 p.m. on Nov. 9.

Senate Updates

Oct. 21 meeting

Censure overturned

Student government unanimously denied the censure of sophomore class senator Elliot Gardner. The censure was a formal disapproval for his failure to attend the minimal amount of meetings with his committee. The senators determined that Gardner spent his time wisely and achieved an ample amount the way he had been conducting his meetings, as the committee’s needs arose.

Community Outreach Committee

Student government unanimously voted to change the name of the Student Outreach Committee to the Community Outreach Committee.

Amendments to the student government Constitution

Gardner proposed two amendments, both of which passed unanimously. The first was to change Article VII, Section II of the Constitution from requiring the committee chair to attend each bi-monthly meeting of the community relations committee to requiring the chair to attend the meeting each month. This rule change is a direct result of Gardner’s censure.

Gardner also proposed the addition of a subsection C which says, “The Student Outreach Committee is responsible for scheduling additional meetings as needed.” This rule was proposed to keep committee chairs accountable.

Sodexo

Student government senators are having difficulty contacting Sodexo, a food service company that serves Chapman. Speaker of Senate Mitchell Rosenberg said that Sodexo has not responded to emails from student government for months. Senators decided to proceed by contacting Chapman administrators and requesting communication.

No students attend second free speech forum

Kristen Weiser | Staff Writer

Dean of Students Jerry Price had high hopes for part two of his Forum for Free Expression and Inclusion Oct. 18, however, no students showed up to his 5:30 p.m. event in the Student Union.

“Maybe for something like this to really bring in the critical mass, we need to discuss it and we have to have a really favorable date and time — but it just wasn’t available to us,” Price said. “But it could be that (students) are just over it. They’ve had their say and heard what they wanted to hear and moved on. We just don’t know until we try it again.”

On Sept. 14, Price held the first Forum for Free Expression and Inclusion, where he and about 25 students debated where the line should be drawn between harassment and free speech. Part two of this discussion was scheduled for Oct. 18. When no students attended, Price was forced to cancel the event.

The advertisement for the forum listed three questions Price hoped to address. They involved topics like the difference between free speech and punishable harassment and what students thought was an appropriate punishment if an incident was deemed harassment. Price also hoped to discuss the possibility of alternative punishment methods to students rather than suspension or expulsion.

“If somebody comes from a home environment that has a certain value structure and then you come here and convey that, because that’s what you have been told to believe your entire life, and then you find out that that’s not accepted here and now you’re out of school or something,” Price said. “Is there more logic to say, ‘No, our job is to have students take the risk, make a mistake, have some opportunity to learn from their mistake and go out and improve?’ I would advocate that that principle applies to free expression.”

Despite the lack of attendees, Price hopes the forum will lead to a more consistent and permanent discussion of free expression at Chapman. Price believes that an important role of the university that has not been fulfilled is to teach students the importance of free speech and expression.

“Just like it’s important for universities to do programming about diversity and inclusion all the time, not just during special months, not just when there’s incidences on campus — we want to have that kind of programming in the fabric of who we are as a university,” Price said. “I would like to see us move to do the same thing about free expression.”

There is no official date for the next forum, but Price plans to schedule the event after the Nov. 8 presidential election and hopes that the events of the election may encourage students to attend the next forum.

Behind the screams

at The 17th Door haunted house

Lorig Yaghsejian | Staff Writer

With a waiver saying you're at risk of peeing your pants and being puked on, The 17th Door Haunted Experience in Tustin has no treats this Halloween - only tricks.

The haunted house follows one storyline for four years. Last year, lead character Paula was a freshman in college who suffered from eating disorders, substance abuse and was sexually abused. Now, she is a sophomore with an unwanted pregnancy who faces a school shooting among other haunted house-themed drama.

Paula's story spans about 35 minutes over a path of 21 different rooms, ranging from the size of a dorm room to a bathroom, each showing a different part of the storyline. The first room is the asylum room where freshman screenwriting major Luke Berger plays a clown. "The reason this haunted house is so frightening is because they play on a lot of real events," Berger said. "The main point is to show that there is such horror in real life and they are trying to show how messed up our culture is through this story."

Berger usually chooses comical roles, but took this job hoping for a change. Since he is easily frightened, it has been a different type of thrill than his usual acting, Berger said.

Berger also plays a school shooter in another room of the haunted house.

"I can't even walk through this. Even in the room I work in I still get scared," Berger said.

Berger said that many individuals participating in the haunted house don't take the waiver seriously. They think everything on it is a joke written just for humorous purposes.

"I felt really bad but I made a girl actually pee her pants like it said on the waiver. After my room, she left her group to get new pants," Berger said.

Another part of the waiver that is ignored is the safety precautions. Berger said that when it begins to get really late, many people come intoxicated and it can result in many violent confrontations.

Berger has been physically hit by people who walked through the haunted house, but said that the house has a zero tolerance policy for violence. If you touch the characters, you are immediately kicked out, according to The 17th Door waiver.

"The haunted house scared me like I have never been scared before," said Sienna Newton, a freshman psychology major. "It played with realistic aspects of life and I put myself in Paula's shoes which made it scarier than if a ghost was just popping out."

At some parts of the haunted house, people are separated from their groups for a personal scare. Berger explained that some individuals are put in rooms with live arachnids and others have been put in vents that are shaken until it feels like they will break.

"I was put into a coffin-type box to wait for my group because I was too afraid to do the other tasks. Even though this was still terrifying, I couldn't bring myself to sit in a room with spiders," Newton said.

Is Smith Hall really haunted?

Olivia Harden | Staff Writer

Jean-Pierre Giagnoli is a real-life ghostbuster. He is a paranormal expert and co-founder of the Southern California Paranormal Detectives.

In October 2013, Giagnoli and his team came to Chapman University to investigate suspicions of ghosts in Smith Hall.

Jean-Pierre Giagnoli

Q: Why was a decision made to conduct this investigation?

A: I've co-lectured at Chapman with (sociology) professor Chris Bader and he told some stories about Smith Hall in particular being haunted, so we thought it would be cool to conduct an investigation.

We set up kind of an impromptu one. It wasn't very efficient, but it worked out pretty well. We wanted to see if we could confirm any reports of the haunting in Smith Hall.

Q: What did the investigation consist of?

A: We tried to do it as we usually do. There were some restrictions that came into play like we weren't able to get power and energy shut off in the building like we wanted to. Having that many students and people can sometimes hinder an investigation.

We have a camera infrared digital video recorder system that we use to record and try to capture any visual evidence. We also use EMF (electromagnetic field) meters. Those are very sensitive so a computer, a refrigerator or a TV could be read by this type of equipment. We want to try to eliminate all energy sources and find a neutral zone where the equipment would get readings that would be abnormal and seemingly come out of nowhere.

My brother is a medium so we use the spiritual and the scientific to conduct investigations. We'll keep him away from all the information to make sure he doesn't hear about whatever activity reports there may be before we go somewhere. We also use digital audio recorders to capture electronic voice phenomena (EVPs) so in case things happen where the human ear can't hear it, these audio devices have greater range to capture sounds that may be recorded.

Q: What were some of the findings from this investigation? Anything interesting?

A: We didn't get a lot of activity but there were a few strange things that ended up happening once we left. Room 215 in Smith had an EMF meter left in there and it was not near any electrical outlets or devices that would have manipulated the meter itself ... and the meter went off.

I know we had a student in, I think, room 214 that walked in by herself and she thought she saw someone out of the corner of her eye but there was nobody there.

My brother, the medium, also picked up a few impressions, including two men from before Smith Hall and possibly Chapman even existed.

Q: Can you explain more in depth what a medium is and what they do?

A: It means, for example, a TV is a medium, right? (My brother) is a medium to the other side - the spirit world - so they communicate with him. When he goes to a haunted location, he'll sometimes get feelings or mental images, hearing names and things so he's able to pick up information that way. He'll get impressions of people or things that could've happened to people or in a certain area or property.

The dangers of 'Halloweekend'

Atharshna Singarajah | Senior Writer

Immersed in the smell of candy corn, the lit up jack-o'-lanterns on porches and people in costumes of all kinds walking around on the streets, many tend to ignore the lurking dangers of Halloween.

"Halloween is a highly-ranked drinking holiday," said Jacqueline Deats, the director of student health. "Having people in costumes adds a different layer to the environment."

Deats said that before participating in celebrations, students should make sure to be responsible, eat and keep hydrated. She also said that students should be aware of their limits and resist the urge to keep drinking once they have reached it.

Drinking also impairs an individual's ability to control his or her actions, which is why Deats said it is important to stay alert, not accept drinks handed to them and be aware of anything individuals could potentially put in their drinks.

"When dressing in costumes, it is difficult to tell who people are which can increase the risk of inappropriate behavior," Deats said.

Senior integrated educational studies major Cassandra Gomez agreed with Deats and said that since everyone is dressed up, it is hard to tell who people are. Gomez also said that with all the excitement of Halloween, people tend to drink more than they're used to.

Public Safety and the Orange Police Department will have more officers on duty during the weekend of Halloween.

Chief of Public Safety Randy Burba said there are frequently more officers on duty on weekends and that Halloween weekend will be no exception.

Burba said that over the years, Public Safety hasn't seen many major issues on campus on Halloween weekend other than occasional medicals calls or minor injuries from falls or binge drinking.

Orange Police Department Public Information Officer Sgt. Fred Lopez said that Halloween is one of the busiest weekends of the year, and there will be a few more police officers on duty than normal.

Lopez said that Halloween is no different than any other night, except people wear costumes.

"Halloween is not the problem. Students should take the same precautions 365 days a year, especially during darkness," Lopez said.

However, Lopez said to pay attention to behavior. If something looks suspicious, call the police.

"Stay in well-lit areas and always have a someone with you," Lopez said. "It's hard to be the victim of a crime when you are with several people."

When it comes to keeping her and her friends safe, Gomez is a believer in the buddy system.

"Always stay with friends and never let a friend go off with someone they just met," Gomez said.

Halloween safety tips from Public Safety Chief Randy Burba

Know your limit
Blood alcohol level is affected by body size, gender and food in stomach.

Watch your drink
Don't accept drinks from people you don't know or leave your drink unattended.

Don't drink and drive
Don't drive if you drank alcohol or get in the car with someone who did. Be extra cautious of drunk drivers on the road.

Bring your phone
Have your phone fully charged in case of any emergency. If you feel unsafe, call Safe Ride or Public Safety.

"Desierto" was released in theaters Oct. 14.

Jack Eckert | Film Critic

"Desierto" follows a group of migrants crossing into the U.S. from Mexico, where they suddenly find themselves being hunted by a sniper rifle-toting vigilante and his vicious hound.

What's sad is that this type of situation – violent vigilantes hunting immigrants – actually happens, and it raises questions about the situation on our border and its politics.

Without a doubt, this film is trying to serve as a point of political commentary. It is made all the more relevant with the controversial immigration policies of presidential candidates in this year's elections. However, I would like to refrain from making any connections or political observations and look at this purely as a film.

"Desierto" is similar to many of the survival thrillers I have seen, like "The Grey" and "The Shallows," and it is not particularly amazing, nor terrible. What makes this film stand out is the amazing villain performance given by Jeffrey Dean Morgan, who plays the insane vigilante, Sam. Through haunting monologues and subtle character traits, Morgan does a fantastic job of playing a fierce, psychotic nutjob.

These include scenes like after Morgan kills the majority of migrants, he starts laughing and cheering manically, and you can see he's walking the line between emotional breakdown and sick, evil glee. It's almost as if part of him hates what he's just done but another part loves it so much that the adrenaline rush has become a major source of addiction for him.

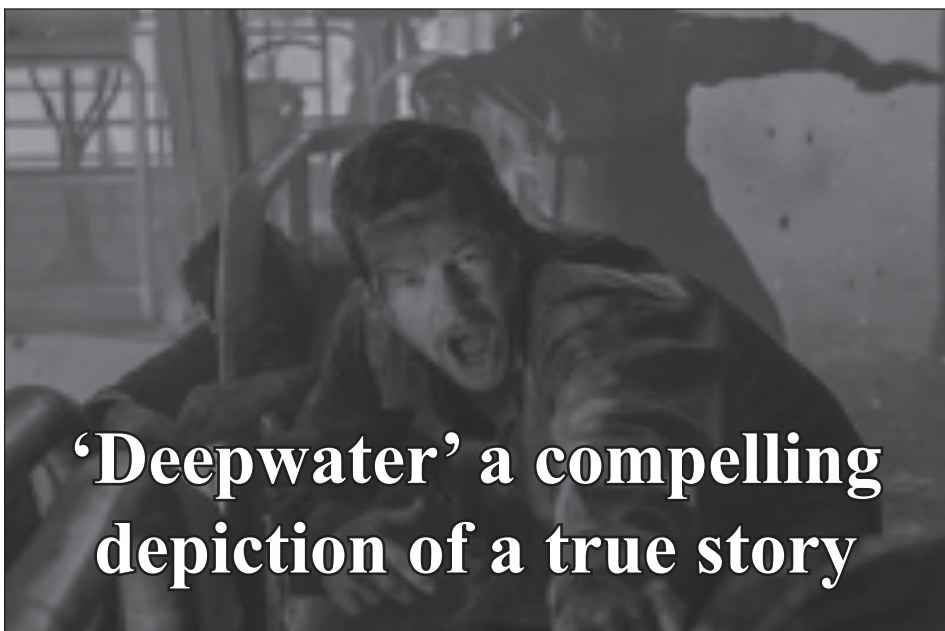

Gael García Bernal also gives an outstanding performance as Moises, the film's brave protagonist. Bernal shows the physical strain a situation like this takes on someone. He also makes the audience feel for Moises on a deep level since he is quite literally fighting for his life and survival, while trying to save the others.

While the acting was very good, I was not truly captivated by this film. It's a compelling story and held my interest, but I didn't leave the theater speechless. There are many intense moments throughout the film, but if you've seen enough films like this, they are very predictable as they all follow same "survivalist" stereotype.

Since this is a foreign film, the majority of its dialogue, with the exception of Sam's, is delivered to the audience via subtitles. This didn't bother me at all, but it may annoy others as I know subtitles can take someone out of the film experience. Also, if you watch this film's trailer, it isn't shown that there is foreign dialogue, though in all honesty, it should be expected given the film's central focus.

There were definitely scary parts but the fear comes more from the constant amount of suspense that you as an audience member feel watching Moises and his fellow migrants run for their lives from a terrifying madman. All in all, if you know you like these types of movies and are down for a post-viewing political discussion, "Desierto" is your type of movie. If not, then you're not missing much by moving on.

"Deepwater Horizon" was released in theaters Sept. 30.

Jack Eckert | Film Critic

The best films are those that are based on true stories and Peter Berg is one of a handful of talented directors capable of making such films. He proved this with "Lone Survivor" and has now done so again with "Deepwater Horizon." The film tells the miraculous true story of the crew of a mobile oil rig, the Deepwater Horizon, and how they faced impossible odds when a massive explosion occurred on April 20, 2010, claiming the lives of 11 people.

What disappointed me so much is that during the lead-up to this film, all I could hear about was how this movie didn't need to be made because it glorified fools who caused an environmental disaster. Let me be abundantly clear: the crew members of the rig are not to blame for what happened. If you are looking for someone to blame, then blame the BP oil executives who cut corners regarding safety. BP is an international oil and gas company.

John Malkovich does a great job of playing one of these executives and it is very enraging when we find out that the person he portrays did not face any criminal punishment for his negligence.

Berg, through spectacular and terrifying visuals, does a masterful job of conveying just how truly horrible that night was. It was as if hell itself came out of the ocean and attacked those crewmembers. Now, I am a Christian and forgive me if this comes across as preachy, but this story makes one believe that there was definitely a higher being protecting and watching over Mike Williams, the chief electronics technician played by Mark Wahlberg, along with the other survivors.

The film has a great cast and while all of the actors and actresses do a phenomenal job, I believe the best performance goes to Kurt Russell, who played Jimmy "Mr. Jimmy" Harrell, the rig manager. Russell does a great job of showing Jimmy as a man with a job to do who only cares about the safety of his crew.

This story serves as a reminder as to what happens when people who shouldn't be in charge are. Good people, the ones who should be making the calls, get hurt. "Deepwater Horizon" is extremely powerful and intense; it will take a lot out of you. The ending nearly brought me to tears. It is a film that all should see.

Try not to make neighbors scream

Doug Close
Opinions Editor

Halloween is upon us.

Like Undie Run and Orientation Week, Halloween sees a huge spike in the number of house parties happening around Chapman. Since Halloween cruelly falls on a Monday this year, there are bound to be plenty of Orange police units on the lookout this weekend for “loud and unruly gatherings” like they were for the first week of school and the Orange Street Fair.

That being said, be careful out there.

For those of you currently living off campus, there are a few things to keep in mind.

This is the first Halloween in Orange since the updated controversial noise ordinance passed. One reason this may be a bit problematic is due to the fact that nights like Halloween bring some of the exact things that led to this ordinance’s implementation in the first place: drunk college students en masse and larger-than-normal house parties.

The fact that Halloween isn’t just on actual Halloween (especially because of the aforementioned Halloween on a Monday situation) also means that there will inevitably be multiple nights of costume-clad parties leading up to it, namely on Friday and Saturday nights.

Naturally, this means that there are bound to be more parties than usual, and those parties are also apt to have much larger crowds of Ken Bones and Harley Quinns at them than usual.

Parties could get a bit “loud and unruly,” which means that students need to be aware that police and Public Safety are likely going to be receiving tons of calls over the coming weekend.

Like I said, nights like this one are where many of the stories that you hear residents tell about Chapman students allegedly peeing and throwing up all over their lawns come from.

But that doesn’t mean that you should be scared to have fun. Halloween is Halloween, midterm season is over and you deserve to dress up like an idiot and have some fun.

At the same time, it’s important that we Chapman students think beyond just ourselves having fun. There are plenty of relatively easy steps that can be taken to avoid running into unnecessary conflict with your neighbors.

For one, at least let them know if you plan on inviting every student you’ve ever met at Chapman over to your house for Halloween festivities. Communication can go a massive way in avoiding needless intervention from the police or Public Safety.

On top of that, I’ve found that it’s best to spread party locations out between people in my friend group. Hosting parties at the same house back-to-back nights is basically asking for a ticket.

Another thing to keep in mind: If you live off campus in a neighborhood, there’s a decent chance that young trick-or-treaters will show up at your house earlier in the evening. Having a $4 bag of Halloween candy on hand for all of the miniature Halloween-goers will go a surprisingly long way in letting your neighbors feel that you are truly a part of the community. And please, designate a relatively sober person to handle the door at this time.

October is a great month and Halloween is a great time. It’d be a shame to have it ruined by lapses in judgment, so be sure to stay alert, be proactive and have each others’ backs this Halloween.

Don’t lose your head this Halloween

The Panther Editorial Board

Halloween is a fun, weird little holiday.

That which is usually taboo is made acceptable this time of year - you can dress monstrous, don fake blood, eat copious amounts of candy and scare the people you love.

It might seem like a free-for-all holiday, but it’s not.

It’s still necessary to put some forethought into your college celebrations so you don’t end up with a witch’s brew of catastrophes.

Here are some things that students should be aware of before heading out to Halloween festivities.

For starters, there’s the alcohol factor. Any Chapman student headed out to a party on Halloween is bound to be surrounded by a lot of alcohol and intoxicated people. It’s important to keep your own limits and tolerance in mind even in the midst of all the Halloween madness. Be wary of classic mystery punch if it’s in a central location and unwatched by people you trust. If you’re going to be drinking hard liquor, stick to your own alcohol and keep your eye on your drinks throughout the night. Binge drinking is dangerous, and every year, there are students who drink too much and end up needing medical assistance. Nobody wants that to happen, so drink responsibly as you go about your night.

The costume factor is another Halloween variable that can be problematic. Sometimes when people dress up in costumes, they act out in ways they might not have under normal circumstances due to a false sense of invisibility that a disguise can bring with it.

A hidden identity is no excuse for aggressive, inappropriate or illegal behavior. Keep your hands, hooves and hooks to yourself and be respectful of others.

While we’re on the topic, be smart about the context of your costume choices. There’s nothing clever or funny about racially or culturally inappropriate costumes. If you have to ask yourself “Is this in bad taste?” about a costume idea, then it probably is, and you shouldn’t do it.

This Halloween, let’s treat each other with respect. Watch out for one another, and if you see something that looks even remotely sketchy happening around you, tell someone.

As mentioned throughout our Oct. 10 “Someone You Know” special edition about sexual assault on campus, affirmative consent is the standard that everyone must adhere to. A conscious, sober and mutually agreed “yes” for each activity is the only way, and that “yes” can be revoked at any time. A costume is not consent. Intoxication is not consent. Exposed skin is not consent.

Be smart, respect those around you and remember that your actions can have consequences that last far beyond this Halloween.

Trump proves nationwide xenophobia

Sandhya Bhaskar,
freshman communication studies major

Since the birth of Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump's campaign, I have read countless articles that proudly denounce white nationalism. Just recently I came across an article with an eye-catching headline that read "Trump Doesn't Reflect America." The headline was positioned on top of a waving American flag that displayed sketches of cartoon people of varying ethnicities holding hands and smiling. While the optimism of the article was a nice sentiment, I couldn't help but feel an overwhelming sense of skepticism toward the notion that a candidate as offensive as Trump is "not reflective" of many American's misplaced anxiety and fear.

It seems to me that Trump is a product of many Americans' ever-present fear of foreigners entering the U.S. and stripping away the privileges of the American lifestyle. One of the ways Trump capitalizes on this ingrained fear is by spreading damaging rhetoric that distorts the topic of immigration. He asserts that by affording refugees and immigrants the basic privileges and safeties of living in America, yours will consequently be jeopardized. Throughout debates, he associated immigration with crime and economic failure with outsourcing and globalization because the idea of foreignness hurting the U.S. resonates among many American voters. It is this election season that we have seen xenophobia become commodified, where supporters can sport a "Make America Great Again" cap and imply that America will be great without immigrants.

So when I think back to that headline I spotted stating "Trump Doesn't Reflect America," I feel conflicted. Trump seems like the natural progression from a decades of media criminalizing Muslims and post-9/11 hate crimes. After 9/11, hate crimes committed against Muslims spiked to 78 percent, according to a study from California State University, San Bernardino. Racial profiling, discrimination, misguided perception and violent crimes have been injustices that almost every Muslim American has had to face.

I see Trump's reflection in the statements of people who have told me that I am not American, just as I see it in the way many people of color are poorly treated due to his rhetoric today. We've seen the xenophobia of our country reflected countless times before, we have just never seen it proudly and boldly slapped on a banner with the intention of heading straight to the White House. Trump's campaign has uncovered a lot about our country and how we view and treat people of color, and to feign shock at Trump's success seems counterproductive.

Drug companies afraid of Proposition 61

when the liquid within these pens cost $1 to make. Calcium EDTA, used to treat those with lead poisoning, now costs 2,700 percent more than it did in 2013 following price hikes from Valeant, its manufacturing company. In short, our healthcare system is broken.

Almost $109 million has been spent to make sure Californians vote against Proposition 61, which would regulate drug prices, according to the California Secretary of State as of Oct. 20. And when you follow the money, it becomes

You may remember a guy named Martin Shkreli who bumped up the price of Daraprim from $13.50 to $750 per pill last year. You may recall the drug company, Mylan, that raised the price of EpiPens from $100 to more than $600 in less than a decade, clear that the pharmaceutical industry doesn't want to lose out on the massive profits it's seeing in the current economic climate. The California Drug Price Relief Act, or Proposition 61, would allow state agencies to negotiate with drug companies for cheaper drugs. The legislation calls for all state agencies to receive the same priced drugs as the Veteran Affairs Committee – the committee that already receives drugs at their cheapest price.

While Bernie Sanders has endorsed this proposition along with groups like AARP, both major political parties have turned their backs on the measure, with very little support from the Democrats in California. While this proposition carries wide appeal across the aisle – it is supported by 77 percent of Democratic voters and 70 percent of Republican voters, according to Politico – politicians seem hesitant to throw their support behind it.

Why, you may ask? Because large donations from pharmaceutical companies have our politicians looking the other way.

What this says about America's economic structuring overall is very troubling. We do not live in a capitalist society, where competition allows the best quality products to rise above those that are inferior. We have an economy bought and paid for by corporations. If this economy is guided by fair competition, why would we not already allow state agencies to negotiate for drug prices? What speaks "capitalism" more than negotiating the price of a good?

Drug companies lobby against Proposition 61 because they are scared. The truth is, CEOs like Shkreli don't care about any "free market." They just care about their bottom line. That's why this vote in November is so important. Even with an election between two polarizing presidential candidates, Californians have the opportunity to come together for a proposition that makes the system work better for everyone. Mylan wants you to stay home on election night. CEOs like Shkreli want you to toss your hands in the air and proclaim you won't be voting.

Yes, the system is broken, but Proposition 61 will change millions of lives for the better. Let's show the establishment that direct democracy triumphs corporate bribes.

As if Trump wasn't bad enough

he is a racist, a bigot and a xenophobe, but I was optimistic enough to think that people would see through that eventually. I never realized how millions of Americans would willfully embrace his discourse. Then he picked Pence as his running mate.

Because I had no idea who Pence was I did some research. That's when I truly became worried. As a queer woman, one of the things I worry about is a candidate's stance on LGBTQIA+ rights.

A few months ago, Donald Trump Jr. was quoted saying that his father's vice president would be in charge of "domestic and foreign policy." That statement makes it sound like Trump will be the figurehead with Pence pulling the strings behind the scenes. So who is potential presidential puppet master Mike Pence?

It's rare that a politician comes along that terrifies me as much as vice presidential candidate Mike Pence. That might sound ridiculous, given that we live in the era of Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump. I think Mike Pence, the governor of Indiana, signed the Religious Freedom Restoration Act last year. The act prohibits the government from burdening a person's ability to practice his or her religion — unless the government can show it has a compelling interest to do so. In the legal jargon of the law, a "person" includes organizations, corporations and societies. It's a fancy legal way of saying that bullying is OK and that a business can refuse to serve LGBTQIA+ people.

That's not the only purpose of this bill, but Pence's anti-gay history makes his penchant for discrimination pretty clear. In 2000, he stated, "Congress should oppose any effort to recognize homosexuals as a 'discrete and insular minority' entitled to the protection of anti-discrimination laws..."

Oh, and he believes in conversion therapy. That's the archaic idea that a person's sexual orientation can be changed if you try hard enough and it is only explicitly banned in five states.

Pence also supported the repeal of "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" and back in 1993, he treated us to this gem of a statement on gay leadership in the military: "Homosexuals are not, as a group, able-bodied. They are known to carry extremely high rates of disease brought on because of the nature of their sexual practices and the promiscuity which is a hallmark of their lifestyle."

In 2013, he was publicly disappointed when the federal Defense of Marriage

Act collapsed, saying, "I believe marriage is the union between a man and a woman and is a unique institution worth defending in our state and nation..."

Pence seems to believe he lives on a moral high ground. He can call it "Renewing the American Dream" all he wants. I call it fear-mongering, homophobic rhetoric.

Pence also believes that gay journalists cannot remain unbiased because of the "pathological condition" caused by their "gaydom." I should put that as a footnote on my resume - "Please note that as a bisexual, my judgment and ability to remain unbiased has been compromised by my gaydom."

Of course, Pence is not the first conservative or Republican to hold these views. Homophobia masquerading as "family values" is omnipresent in the Republican Party's platform. The official 2016 GOP platform reads: "Traditional marriage and family, based on marriage between one man and one woman, is the foundation for a free society." In the deadliest year for LGBTQIA+ people, the community is not being shown the support a lot of the country continues to insist we have.

I'm a queer woman, and Pence will make the United States of America unsafe for me and many others.

Chapman's track a little bit wack

Jacob Hutchinson
Sports Editor

If you've ever set foot on Wilson Field's track, you may have noticed it's a bit odd. Whether you're taking a leisurely jog or timing yourself on your mile, there's something off about it.

For one, there are only three lanes around the whole track. Second, according to Sports Information Director Steven Olveda, it's 481 meters, compared to the 400-meter size of a regulation size NCAA track. So when you're timing yourself, thinking, "Am I actually this slow?" You're not. Or maybe you are, but the track isn't helping.

Chapman doesn't even list its track on the Chapman Athletics website, let alone its dimensions. And if you look at a map of campus, you'll see the map only shows Wilson Field itself and seems to ignore that it even has a track.

It's pretty apparent that Chapman itself must realize how odd its track is, and for that reason it does its best not to publicize it. I challenge you to try and find any information about the track itself and see if there's any proof of its existence besides in photos.

Sure, it is technically a "recreational track" but it seems odd that there are so many quality athletic facilities at Chapman, yet we lack a functioning, standard-length track. I don't think I've ever seen a three-lane track besides Chapman's.

If you look up Occidental College's or Pomona-Pitzer's tracks, for example, you immediately see images of their eight-lane, regulation tracks.

According to Olveda, a regulation size track wouldn't fit on Wilson Field without seriously cutting into the rest of the field which needs to have both soccer and football fields on it because it's the only field Chapman has.

Despite that, it still seems odd that schools like Occidental with 2,112 students and Pomona-Pitzer, with a combined roughly 2,700 students, both have full-sized tracks, yet Chapman, with more than 6,300 undergraduate students, has a misshapen, mostly recreational track.

Besides just being generally odd, the track hurts Chapman's track and field programs. It's pretty hard to market yourself as being proactive with a sports program that doesn't even have a regulation-size facility.

The track and field program at Chapman is growing fairly quickly. The university would do well to at least consider ameliorating some of the inherent difficulties in place for coaches who are trying to recruit and train the best teams that they can.

Maybe it's just me, but with all of the athletics facilities in place, brand-new Wilson Field turf and new courts being built for Chapman's tennis teams, it seems like Chapman's track and field teams are being left in the dust. Yes, the baseball and softball teams play off campus too, but at least they have local home fields. The track and field teams don't even have a home track.

In a way, Chapman's oddly-shaped track is kind of endearing. But it also shows just how little priority is given to the track and field teams. Obviously I don't know how difficult it would be to get a regulation-level track built whether or not it's around Wilson Field, but it's clear the track and field teams are not prioritized by the university and that's what's really troubling.

Late game-winner keeps women's soccer in playoff race

Jayson King | Staff Writer

Before a 5-0 loss Oct. 22 to Pomona-Pitzer, the Chapman women's soccer team was able to score a goal 41 seconds into overtime to defeat the Occidental College Tigers 2-1 Oct. 19 and move up to fourth place in the Southern California Intercollegiate Athletic Conference.

"It's huge," said head coach Courtney Calderon. "We shouldn't have been in that situation, but once we were, for them to come back together as a team and push and get that goal, it's huge."

Both Occidental (7-6-2, 4-6-2) and Chapman (8-7-1, 5-6-1) were tied for fourth place in the conference before the game, but with the victory, Chapman took fourth place and a playoff spot.

"Obviously, it helped with confidence building," Calderon said. "We're just finally connecting. We're clicking as a team. We've had that all along, we just haven't completed all the connections. We didn't do everything we needed to today, but in the end of the day we got the result we needed."

kick in the 14th minute, the Panthers tried to keep their lead and see the win through. Occidental responded with pressure that proved to be too much and the Tigers found the equalizer in the 84th minute.

The Panthers didn't let the tied game spell defeat as freshman forward Taryn Silverglate buried the ball into the back of the net for the game-winning goal and her first goal of the season.

"I had missed a shot really early on in the game, so I knew I owed it to my team and my coach that I had to score, so it was nice that it happened," Silverglate said.

On Saturday, Oct. 22 the Panthers traveled to first-placed Pomona-Pitzer (12-1-2, 10-0-2). Chapman went down early in the game, allowing two goals within the first 29 minutes.

The Panthers kept the game at 2-0 until the 61st and 65th minutes, when Pomona-Pitzer doubled its total. The hosts completed their rout of the Panthers with a 76th minute goal, despite the eight saves made by senior goalkeeper Kristin Kleinow.

Despite the loss, Chapman maintained its fourth-place standing in the conference. It will close out its regular season with two home games against the University of La Verne Oct. 26 at 4 p.m. and Claremont-Mudd-Scripps Oct. 29 at 11 a.m.

Women's volleyball gets two wins on senior night

Malvica Sawhney | Staff Writer

The Chapman women's volleyball team lost at home to first-placed California Lutheran University 3-1 on Tuesday, Oct. 18, before ending its final home games of the season with 3-0 wins against Oberlin College (7-14, 1-5) and the California Institute of Technology (2-18, 0-13) on senior night Saturday Oct. 22.

Cal Lutheran (21-4, 12-2) topped the Southern California Intercollegiate Athletic Conference last year and swept the Panthers (12-12, 6-8) at a match earlier in the season. Despite the loss, head coach Mary Cahill said that errors held the Panthers back.

"I thought we played pretty well," Cahill said. "We had some opportunities to put a little more pressure on them but they're No. 5 in the nation, so I think we were hoping to catch them off guard and I think we did, but we kind of made some errors."

While the Panthers were able to get in an early lead in every set and even managed to win the first one 25-17, the Regals came back every single time and claimed the other sets 25-21, 25-20 and 25-22.

Cahill credited the team's effort against a difficult opponent.

"I just hope they see that they played with the fifth team in the nation, so when we play the rest of our games in the season, they need to realize they can play with the top teams and step it up against the others," Cahill said.

After the loss, Chapman responded with a pair of home wins on senior night Oct. 22.

Cahill credited the team for carrying the momentum from the first game into the latter.

"We played well this morning which carried over to tonight," Cahill said. "We were able to get everybody in our conference match tonight and it's good to give the players that experience."

During the conference match against Caltech, the team comprised of a rotating number of players on the team who don't generally get a chance to play. Members like junior opposite Kylie Cooke and junior co-captain and middle blocker Abby Smith were seen on the sidelines cheering their fellow teammates on.

Sophomore middle blocker Lauren Friend said the senior night atmosphere added to the team's energy.

"It was a great energy coming into this game," Friend said. "Being senior night, we were able to have fun, give the seniors some love and let them rack up their kills."

While the Panthers outmatched Caltech 25-8 and 25-12 in the first two sets, during the third set Caltech was able to take an early lead, which Chapman later caught up to and ended up winning 25-21.

Although a doubleheader sweep was a great end to the day, the victory was bittersweet for the Panthers as they were sending off two senior outside hitters, Casey Brown and Meghan Nelson.

"It's crazy, when I first started I was like, 'four years is a long time,' but now that it's come to an end, it went by so quickly," Brown said. "But it was a great four years and I love all the girls."

Nelson also echoed Brown's bittersweet sentiment.

"It's sad that my volleyball career is coming to an end, but I'm glad I got to play on a team for all four years of college," Nelson said. "It was great being on the court with my girls tonight."

According to Nelson, the team has great potential with strong playing from the sophomores and great leadership from the juniors.

"It was a great last game to end on," Brown said.

Chapman has two more games left in the season, both away games at 7 p.m. First the Panthers travel to Whittier College (9-15, 5-8) on Tuesday, Oct. 25 and then close out the regular season at the University of Redlands (12-12, 3-11) on Friday, Oct. 28.

Steven and Rocky: The team behind the scenes of Chapman Athletics

Malvica Sawhney | Staff Writer

Every Chapman sports game has a small team working from the sidelines.

Setting up the statistics table at games. Ensuring the national anthem plays. Keeping track of the clock. Tracking substitutions and statistics. Recapping the games online. Getting live video up and running. Managing the Chapman Athletics social media accounts. Setting up player and coach interviews.

You'd probably guess there were more than two people behind those duties.

Yet, the Chapman Athletics sports information department is run by just Sports Information Director Steven Olveda and Recreational Sports Manager Raquel Rinauro.

"Rocky (Rinauro) and I update and maintain the Chapman Athletics website," Olveda said. "We do the writing, graphics and statistics from all the games and we have a photographer who takes pictures for us, so this is basically our job."

Olveda and Rinauro also maintain social media accounts of Chapman athletics and take care of media relations, including any communication between the players and the media.

"Our job is to keep everything as smooth as possible for the athletes, since we're a Division III school and they work hard to study as well as play sports," Olveda said. "We're not exactly used to being in the spotlight ourselves, since we usually try to highlight the players and the hard work they do."

However, their jobs are not their only connection to Chapman.

BONNIE CASH Staff Photographer

Sports Information Director Steven Olveda and Recreational Sports Manager Raquel Rinauro track statistics during the men's soccer game against the University of Redlands Oct. 22.

Olveda studied television and broadcast journalism at Chapman and graduated in 2008, while Rinauro graduated from Chapman in 2014 with a degree in business administration and was a member of the softball team for two years. She is pursuing an MBA at Chapman, as well.

"I love baseball and I'm a huge Dodgers fan," Olveda said. "I wasn't good enough to play at Chapman but I loved covering the games here when I had a work study position in this department."

Rinauro also held a position in the sports department as a student and within a few months of graduating, she was offered a job as the sports information assistant by Associate Director of Athletics and Compliance Doug Aiken, who held Olveda's position at that time.

"I think one of my favorite memories that kind of happened over time was that Doug Aiken was the first person I met at Chapman as a high school student in early 2010 and then he offered me the position in 2014," Rinauro said. "I think it's one of my fondest memories because it was my first job offer and it was coming from someone who was the first person I met at Chapman."

Olveda and Rinauro cannot be everywhere at once so they have a team of students working with them.

He helps Olveda and Rinauro with sporting events by maintaining the scoreboard, video, statistics, announcing and other similar tasks.

"At home football games when we're in the press box, Steven hooks it and gets us all tons of pizza," Shroyer said. "They're great bosses and do a good job of mixing a workplace environment with a casual feel to it."

Shroyer's thoughts are echoed by junior Dylan Blumberg who is a sports information assistant.

"They're kind and diligent as bosses, and as people they're very personable," Blumberg said.

Shroyer said that a lot of their charm comes from making it fun for everyone while also ensuring that all aspects are run smoothly.

Sophomore Jack McAdam, a sports information assistant, said he enjoys the atmosphere of the office and the attention to detail that Olveda and Rinauro put into their jobs.

"Both Steven and Rocky are very approachable people," McAdam said. "They work great with staff and are very relatable."

On a regular day, Olveda and Rinauro have regular nine-to-five schedules and are able to get all their work done within that time frame, but on some nights during the weekend or when there's a home football game, they could stay as late as midnight to finish their work.

"I never thought of this as my career path, but I love this job," Rinauro said. "Where we're at right now is where we're going to be for a long time."

Soccer gets crucial wins over Claremont-Mudd-Scripps, Redlands

Jacob Hutchinson | Sports Editor

The Chapman men's soccer team (11-4-2, 8-4-2) took home two crucial victories this past week, with a 3-0 win against Claremont-Mudd-Scripps Wednesday, Oct. 19, before returning home to beat the first-placed University of Redlands 2-1 Saturday, Oct. 22.

Head coach Eddie Carrillo said the Claremont game was essentially a must-win for Chapman.

"I didn't tell them that (it was must-win), but yeah," Carrillo said. "It was important for us to have a good result there and not tying either. We needed a win and it didn't matter how, but we just needed a win."

Senior midfielder Jake Sarmiento opened the scoring against the Stags (9-6-1, 7-6-1) slotting home the opening goal on Wednesday in the 12th minute of the game after a shot rebounded off the crossbar.

The game stayed 1-0 in favor of Chapman until senior midfielder Daniel Malikyar added to Chapman's total in the 60th minute, after an assist from junior forward Grant Fremmerlid. Fremmerlid then gave Chapman its third and final goal of the game 12 minutes later.

The win put Chapman ahead of the Stags in the Southern California Intercollegiate Athletic Conference, on a night that also marked Carrillo's 200th win at Chapman.

"I've had the opportunity to coach a lot of games, so if you coach a lot of games, hopefully you're going to win your share," Carrillo said. "I don't know how many people actually knew about it. I knew, but I'm not sharing it with the players or anybody else, but it was nice more to get it out of the way than anything. That wasn't the priority though, the priority was to get the win."

Going into the game against first-placed Redlands (13-4, 11-3) Saturday, Carrillo said that the Panthers were a good match for the team.

"If I didn't think we had the capability, then we'd have to change some things, but I think we're a good team," Carrillo said. "If we score, we usually win, so it's just trying to get our numbers more than we have in the past against them and make sure we're consistent, but I think our expectation is to win and they're good, but I think we're better."

Carrillo's prediction for Redlands came true as the Panthers jumped out to an early lead to beat the visitors 2-1.

Senior midfielder Sam Rudich helped open the scoring for Chapman as he sent a pass in behind the Redlands defense for Sarmiento, who put away the pass with a first-time finish in the bottom right corner of the net in the 8th minute of the game.

Redlands responded with its own goal just three minutes later, as junior forward Chase Boone cut back across the Chapman goal and equalized for the Bulldogs. Despite the setback, Rudich and Sarmiento combined again four minutes later. Rudich put an elevated ball over the top of the Redlands defenders and Sarmiento again finished the chance with a first-time shot, this time chipping the Redlands goalkeeper.

Rudich credited both players' readings of the game on the goals.

"Good players just think alike I guess," Rudich said. "You don't even really need to look where a player's running, you just have to have that feeling in the back of your mind that he's going to be there and you have to trust your teammates to do the right thing. And (Sarmiento) is a really smart player, so he'll always look for runs in behind and kind of slip away from defenders."

Sarmiento said the goals felt great especially because Redlands is a rival team.

"They just had holes in their back line and I just made a diagonal run in. Sam (Rudich) slotted two perfect balls in and just timing and spacing really," Sarmiento said. "(It felt) really good because these guys (Redlands) are kind of our No. 1 rivals and it feels good to get the three points that we needed. We're still fighting for a playoff spot, so it just felt good to get the two goals on the scoreboard."

Chapman's defense played a crucial role in the game, with senior defender Connor Tobia and freshman defender Jarod Matteoni both clearing away a number of aerial chances from Redlands.

"We have a lot of experience," Carrillo said. "We have a lot of good guys back there and (Tobia) is great in the air and we missed him the three weeks he was out. He's fit and doing well even though he was sick today, but I just think that's one of our strengths as long as we can anticipate a little of what they're going to do, usually we're really good in the air."

Sarmiento said that this game had significant postseason implications.

"I'm pretty sure a win for them would have clinched first place, so there's no way we were going to let them get that on our home field," Sarmiento said. "This win still puts us in contention for a home playoff game."

Chapman will play its next game at the California Institute of Technology (0-15, 0-14) Monday, Oct. 24 at 7 p.m.

After a tough loss to the University of Redlands last week, the Chapman football team (3-3, 2-2) was able to rebound on Saturday, Oct. 22 and secure a 30-7 victory against the University of La Verne Leopards (1-5, 1-3), who were coming off of a 57-56 homecoming win against Occidental College.

Chapman had a 9-11 overall record against La Verne going into the game (now 10-11) and in the last meeting, the Leopards won 49-42, with all seven of La Verne's touchdowns being scored on the ground.

On the first drive of the game, junior quarterback Ricky Bautista was able to find a hole in La Verne's defense and run the ball in for a touchdown. Junior kicker Lucas Alfonso then tacked on the extra point to put Chapman up 7-0.

Bautista credited the offensive line for opening up a hole for him.

"The offensive line blocked great and, you know, when they do block great that opens up things for the offense," Bautista said. "When they push guys outside, then it opens up seams and the ability to take off and run, so that's what we took advantage of."

The Leopards' first drive ended quickly after a few short gains by senior running back Dallas Parent, who rushed for a total of 298 yards last week but was held by the Panthers this week to 37.

In previous games this season, the Panthers have faced issues when it comes to accuracy and success in third down conversions, something Bautista said was down to, "just executing the play. If everyone does their job then we can get a first down, just execution basically."

The Leopards put their first and final points on the board when sophomore quarterback Josh Evans was able to connect downfield, which led to a run by Parent into the end zone. This was followed by sophomore kicker Eric Rembecky's successful extra point bringing the score to 10-7 near the end of first quarter.

After a Chapman field goal and an unsuccessful drive by the Leopards, the Panthers regained possession only to add another touchdown and extra point to finish off the half. With third down and 9 yards to go, Bautista ran the ball to La Verne's 25-yard line and then threw a complete pass to senior wide

"I think it is just team effort. You don't get sacks unless everyone else is doing their job covering and keeping the quarterback in the pocket," Wadors said. "(Senior receiver Ethan Weinstein, which was followed up by an extra point.

Late in the third quarter, Chapman added its final touchdown of the game, courtesy of a 37-yard pass from Bautista to junior wide receiver Jacob Isabel.

After an unsuccessful fourth down fake punt attempt by the Leopards, the fourth quarter began with Alfonso kicking a 39-yard field goal, giving Chapman its 30-7 winning margin.

In La Verne's final attempts to score, Chapman senior defensive end Ben Wadors was able to sack senior quarterback Zachary Tomlinson twice, bringing his sack total to three. All hope was lost for La Verne after Tomlinson's pass was picked off in the end zone by junior cornerback Ron Washington.

Wadors credited the team's commitment for his success.

linebacker Eddie Lee) Favors and I talk a lot, so he helps me out with my moves and telling me what's working. I was in the zone and on top of that, I know (sophomore defensive back) Trevor Ross was watching me from the sidelines, so before the fourth quarter he was giving me some helpful pointers."

Coming into the game, La Verne averaged 31 points a game. Favors said Chapman's ability to stop crucial plays had a big part in the team's defensive success.

"Stopping big plays and stopping whatever they thought would work and working as a team and having fun really, the biggest part is having fun," Favors said. "You go out there playing a child's game, you know."

The Panthers will play at California Lutheran University (3-3, 3-1) on Saturday, Oct. 29 at 1 p.m.
